Today's publication might be the most important of 2023, and what I (Lior Gantz, founder of WealthResearchGroup.com) wish it to be for you is the most accurate and comprehensive geopolitical picture and outlook, irrespective of political agenda, pure and succinct, devoid of left and right views – just the cold, hard truths.

The Bretton Woods agreement of 1944 paved the way for the 2-bloc New World Order, which emerged after WW2 ended.

Today, the new monetary agreements might include Central Bank Digital Currencies, which are the end of personal freedoms – see HERE and HERE!

On one side was the United States, a geographical fortress, from a topographical point of view, with lush and fertile lands, mild climate, a massive export business of grains and agricultural produce, vast lands for settlement of new population, the Mississippi Network of Rivers providing water highways, and peaceful neighbors to the North and South.

One important in this is IRAN, and its conflict with Israel, which you can read about HERE, because it's crucial!

On the other side is the Soviet Union, the largest nation on Earth, with vast planes, fertile soils, but easy to infiltrate and conquer (which it has been throughout recorded history), with the last attempt coming just two years before Bretton Woods, when Nazi Germany wanted Moscow and went for it.

That's why we see a GENERATIONAL BREAKOUT in gold, which you must understand – check THIS OUT!

Because foreigners have never found it difficult to advance towards Moscow, Russia's doctrine is constant geographical expansion, creating strategic depths as far as the Pacific Ocean on the eastern border, Siberia to the north, Central Asia and the Kavkaz Mountains to the south, to guard from Turkey and Iran. But its kryptonite is truly to the west, where the Baltic nations and even Poland, Romania and Germany, if possible, are necessary to fortify the shield, not to mention Ukraine.

Vladimir Putin, a scholar of Russia's history, doesn't live with the same thoughts the westerners have. To him, war is Russia's default mode.

In the DNA of the Russians, war is either happening now or brewing; peace is temporary and should not be construed as a real option.

These two post-WW2 empires fought a Cold War, with the USA creating the Bretton Woods system and the Russians forming the Warsaw Pact.

America's system went something to the effect of:

1. Forming a global trading and commerce network (roots of globalization).

country, all nations took it as a sign that the Bretton Woods doctrine is no more.

Putin also knows this and understands that, for Russia, it is now or never, when it comes to getting back to its old glory, but it failed epically in Ukraine and lost its prestige. In 2023, Putin must make an even more aggressive move into Ukraine, or risk losing everything and ending up as one of Russia's worst leaders.
